What Works in Family Mediation

mediation is the means by which a neutral third party helps two people in dispute to resolve their differences and plan their future co-operation. This work uses the experience of family mediation in Sweden, where it has been available for a decade, to present a model of best practice based upon what does and does not work in the actual process of mediating. A series of stories drawn from the work of Swedish family mediators is set into the developing context of British divorce law reform, which saw the publication in 1995 of a Government white paper looking to the future of mediation and the grounds for divorce.

Mediation in Family Disputes

This is the authoritative textbook on family mediation as well as mediators. This work will be indispensable for practitioners and scholars across a wide range of fields including social work and law. It draws on a wide cross-disciplinary theoretical literature and on the author's extensive and continuing practice experience. It encompasses developments in policy research and practice in the UK and beyond. Roberts presents mediation as an aid to joint decision making in the context of a range of family disputes, notably those involving children. Mediation is seen as a process of intervention distinct from legal social work and therapeutic practice, drawing on a distinctive body of knowledge across disciplinary fields including anthropology, psychology, and negotiation theory. Incorporating empirical evidence, the book emphasizes the value of mediation in mitigating the harmful effects of family breakdown and conflict. First published in 1988 as a pioneering work, this third edition has been fully updated to incorporate legal and policy developments in the UK and in Europe, new sociological and philosophical perspectives on respect, justice, and conflict, and international research and practice innovations.

It is important to understand that when a marriage is over, it is not the time for retribution and revenge, but rather the opportunity to strike out for a new life while providing for and protecting the children. This book, the first comprehensive treatment of family mediation for Chinese families, provides the knowledge and skills to achieve that objective. Throughout the book, the author discusses practical techniques for resolving family conflicts and creating parenting plans. The model described enables mediators who may be social work, psychology, or legal professionals, to negotiate the issues in dispute so as to arrive at a settlement that is mutually acceptable and is fair and equitable to the families. Divorcing couples should also read the book because it will help them with ideas and principles leading towards amicable solutions.

This title was first published in 2001 when marriages break down most parents experience difficulty in agreeing on contact or residence arrangements for their children. Featuring extensive empirical research, this book examines the effectiveness of family mediation services and challenges the view that court-based interventions are unlikely to be successful.

Renegotiating Family Relationships

Over the past thirty years, there has been a dramatic shift in the way the legal system approaches and resolves family disputes. Traditionally, family law dispute resolution was based on an adversary system where two parties and their advocates stood before a judge who determined which party was at fault in a divorce and who would be awarded the rights in a custody dispute. Now, many family courts are opting for a problem-solving model in which courts attempt to resolve both legal and non-legal issues at the same time. American families have changed dramatically; divorce rates have leveled off and begun to drop while the number of children born and raised outside of marriage has increased sharply. Fathers are more likely to seek an active role in their children's lives while this enhanced paternal involvement benefits children. It also increases the likelihood of disputes between parents as a result. The families who seek legal dispute resolution have become more diverse and their legal situations more complex in divorced from reality. Jane C. Murphy and Jana B. Singer argue that the current problem-solving model fails to address the realities of today's families; the authors suggest that while today's dispute resolution regime may represent an improvement over its more adversary predecessor, it is built largely around the model of a divorcing nuclear family with lawyers representing all parties. A model that fits poorly with the realities of today's disputing families to serve the families it is meant to help, the legal system must adapt and reshape itself.
